THE NEW COUNCIL.—The first meeting of the recently elected Council will be held Monday evening, May 2, at which time the city officers for the ensuing year will be elected. There is no general understanding between the aldermen in reference to the matter, we learn, but the probabilities are that the present city officers will be reëlected. The one republican alderman, Mr. Roys, may hold a party caucus and unanimously resolve to demand a distribution of the spoils, but the probabilities are that he will permit the matter to go by default.

programs it is fair to conclude that the three illustrated lectures to be given by Dr. H. W. Death of Don M. Seymour. Fatal Result of an Accident on the Ball

Field. A most deplorable accident, one that with its result has cast a shadow of sorrow over our entire city and made sad and desolute indeed one recent happy home, was that which occurred at the fair grounds, last Saturday afternoon, in the course of a game of base ball. Among the many boys and young men who were watching with interest every movement of the game. was one Don M. Seymour, son of Mr and Mrs. William B. Seymour of this city, and it was while thus engaged, lying on the ground, twelve or fifteer feet from where the batsmen stood, that a bat slipped from the grasp of one of the players and struck him near the centre of the forehead. The force and shock of the awful blow stunned and dazed the poor boy and caused the home, where he was soon taken with spasms so severe that his physicians thought his death must soon follow. During Saturday night and early Sunday morning, he was seemingly some the worse occurred about noon Sunday, however, and no hopes were held from that time until the hour of his death, seven o'clock Monday morning.

Following the bird-path the men from the ship went at once into the

Every spot was crowded with a These are the trees once known so well motley, screeching, jostling mass of bird citizens, whose nests, containing the young and eggs, were on all On each nest sat an angry mother, who would open her mouth and scream some terrible threat in the penguin language, and as the greenish white eggs were broken in the onward charge of the men the birds seemed to be driven to desperation. A valuable dog that had started with the exploring party was lost in the bedlam of a city, and, although repeated endeavors were made to find him, he was never heard from, and the poor fellow was probably killed by the outraged inhabitants.

Not many miles from here was another small island with an area of Ah, no, good heart, thou still canst stir, hardly a quarter mile, yet on it was Still lives the love first bid thee leap; another city of over 400,000 inhabitants.

As on Inaccessible, the penguins had a general railway leading up from the sea into the tussock grass, the hard rock actually being polished by the millions of feet that had passed over it. As the voyagers appeared hundreds of the birds were passing up and down, hopping along in their ludicrous manner.

One remarkable fact concerning these strange creatures, ascertained from the two sailors, was that in the middle of April, after molting, the cities were deserted, not a single inhabitant of the countless thousands Where they went, how remaining. far, or what they went for was inexplicable. Quail Courtship. I once had the pleasure of witnessing the courting and pairing off of a flock of quail. I was sitting so I could look down on a flat rock that stood up higher than the top of a thicket of brush and weeds surrounding it near a small brook. I first heard the chatter of quails in the brush. After holding quite an animated confab one hen quail flew up on the rock and was followed by five or six males. Miss Quail strutted around a few times, apparently not noticing her admirers, assuming coquettish attitudes, and putting on more style and affectation than a human dudess of the present day. She finally took a conspicuous position and herself. Her admirers, in the mean time, stood around and looked at each other with defiant eye and mien. They then began to strut around, spread and trail their wings, try graceful walks and poises, each striving to outdo the others. The more they tried to make Quail the more excited they became, until they went to fighting. They fought hard and furiously, until at last one of them, by a fortunate pass, knocked his antagonist off the rock. He did not stop, but pitched into the first one he came to. time until there was but one left. The victor took one comprehensive look over the field of battle, struck up a rattling chatter and walked up to Miss Quail, strutted around a few a United States senator, keeping up a rattling string of-of-well, blarnev. Another hen then came upon the rock with three or four males and went through the same form of courting, and to the victor—the reward of a wife. So it went on until all the hens were mated and gone. After that three males came upon the rock and did absolutely look forlorn and showed it in every motion. flew in a different direction than all the others. Just around one corner of the tower I could see a thick growth of ivy, but it was quite out of my reach; and even if I could reach it, I could not dare to trust my weight to it, running the risk of tearing a mass of it from its uncertain hold on the wall, and falling, stunned and helpless, a prey to my enemies at the foot. There was no time to be lost, however. The cords with which I had been bound! No use. They were of no appreciable length for such a distance as I had to descend. The bedclothes held out a better hope. With the help of a small pocket-knife I managed with much trouble to tear the bedding into broad stripsample for my purpose—and with feverish haste, yet very heedfully, as one who knew that not his own life only but the safety of another rested, perhaps, in every knot, I made a long rope and fastened one end of it secures to the fron bedstead. I tugged at it, and tried it with might and main. Every length stood the utmost test I could impose upon it. Then I lowered it carefully out of the window. There was no key in the inside of the door, but I piled ncross it such articles of furniture as I could move without making much noise; appeared to devote her entire attention and, having constructed a pretty substantial baricade, I mounted the window-sill, and prepared to trust myself to the rope I had made. It is a simple matter to read about, and I had often taken it, in stories, as a simple matter of course, that escaping by means of a rope of bedding was as casy as any other form of exit. But when, with muscles which had had no exercise a favorable impression before Miss for a long period, I grasped the homely Quail the more excited they became, ladder and glanced from the solid safety of the dark room to the whispering abyss below, which the flimsy-looking rope pierced for some distance like a flickering light, I felt a strange reluctance to commit myself to the work of my hands. There was no time for hesitation, however; the thought of Mary in the power of Plowand then kept knocking one off at a itz banished all my momentary fears, and with a firm clasp of the blanket I let my feet go, seeking the nearest knot. Once under weigh it seemed safe and simple enough, but ere I had got two of my own lengths down the rope, I heard the click of the lock above, the jar of the door sharply times with self-importance enough for opened, and the crash of falling furniture. Speeding my descent too much, I miscalculated the length of the drop, and letting go too soon, fell heavily a considerable distance to the ground. As I picked myself up, shaken and bruised, I heard from the window above me a singularly shrill whistle, and as I set off running as hard as a damaged foot would allow me, there came a distant answering note,

It is strange, but true, that, as I set off in at last meeting my enemies on straightforward, if not on equal terms. was convinced, my death.

I ran rashly, buoyantly, at top-speed across the lawn, as I imagined; but the unaccustomed quarter from which I had started, confused me; the thick masses of clouds, which kept on remorselessly deyouring with dense blackness the dazzling mother-o'-pearl edges with which the slighted moon sought to beautify her defeat, had rolled up an impenetrable barrier of mysterious darkness.

I stumbled and tripped, and ere long, with dismay, tinged with a sense of the ridiculous, plunged head foremost into thick bushes, whose pliant branches flipped my face, while the heavy autumn dew fell in a shower all about me. I picked myself up, half laughing at so ridiculous mishap in so serious a crisis. I looked anxiously about me. Those who have never experienced what it is to be absolutely deprived of one's bearings, even in familiar spot, will have, perhaps, some difficulty in realizing the peoplexing nature of my position. It is by no means given to every man to carry about a selfacting compass in his internal consciousness, as a thick London fog in a suburban district has shown to many clear-headed inhabitants of Greater London. Ridiculous as it may seem, when I had gazed about me, and to some extent recovered from the shock of my two falls, I could come to no other conclusion than that I was practically lost. I had set off running upon instinct. I fully imagined that I had struck across the lawn and was making for the drive, which would have shown me the road to safety, whatever precautions I might have been driven to adopt by the way. But having landed myself in some unknown bushes, I was fairly at a loss on extricating myself. The sky was dark, the earth was shrouded in dead blackness. I could dimly make out in only one quarter the looming outline of a big tree, This was no guide whatever. No tree that I had seen by daylight near Hanover Lodge had a tithe of the vague vastness, the mysterious majesty of the tree that had expanded in the darkness, and assimilated the infinity of night. I stood collecting all my senses in this

Help came from the enemy. A whistle, such as I had heard as I dropped from my prison, drew my attention to one quarter of the darkness, which, from that moment, was no longer without form and void. I gazed steadily. Then there became visible a dull light, as of a lamp behind a thick and partially drawn This was better than nothing, but it told me little. There surely, was the house, but from what side or angle of the house did that blurred light shine?

I still waited. Nothing was to be gained by a run in the dark. I waited, feeling more keenly than ever, now that the excitement of the first futile rush was over the desperation of my position—the fate that awaited me if captured.

Suddenly I became aware of a dissipation of the darkness. Was it only the effect of anxious straining of the sight in the unresponsive medium? No. form of the clouds was again becoming apparent. Their bastioned outlines again assumed significance. Suddenly—more suddenly than I had dared to hope—the dim and muffled moonlight renewed the time of action for me and for my pursuers. I perceived that my general idea had been correct, but that I had failed to allow for the circular form of the lawn. Once more I set out, but, when I was well out of cover of the shrubs, I suddenly saw, within a few yards of me, the form of a man dart apparently from the bushes. He came straight towards me. To hesitate was to be lost. I changed my course. I ran at him. I remembered some of the football lore of old times, and I laid him low with hack which would have reduced his useas I closed with him told me that it was possession of the scene. The light had best of my ability, towards the bushes. me cover if the moon should shine brightly and give my pursuers a chance. And yet I would rather have had light and an idea which way to go than enjoy the horrible security of the darkness. The railway was my great idea. If I could reach the bridge and get down by the bank upon the line I might be saved. But which way was the bridge? Suddenly there broke upon my ear the scream of a distant railway-whistle. As if in mockery of its promise of guidance and future safety it was echoed by the fell sound of that whistle from the house which was rallying the bloodhounds upon my track. No matter. There was the suggestion of life, of traffic, of the wholesome world outside. And more—as the prolonged railway-whistle grew rapidly ader, I saw in the distance the bright ight of the steam illuminated by the fire through the open door of the enginefurnace, and with its shrill call of triumph and its floating banner of fire the night train sped rapidly on its way. With my arm held out to guard my face, if I should un azinst bushes or trees I set off at a and pace towards the bridge.

Luckily for me my course was no easy one. I made slow progress, hampered by stumbles and the difficulties of keeping a correct line. At last I struck the road. wave of indescribable joy filled my heart as I felt the gravel under my feet, and against the clearing sky recognized the cloud-like tree-tops of the avenue. But as my feet crunched on the loose gravel, the moon shon; out in full splendor, and there was a shout of harsh triumph behind me. Ah! had I had but a weapon, I would have stood at bay and given good account of myself to the bloodthirsty wolves who were hunting me. But I was defenceless, and a sudden thought of Mary, perhaps even now on the sea with Plowitz, turned all my energies again to making good my escape. I ran as fast as I could towards the bridge. I kept well away from my pursuers. I reached the bridge, I sought the end of the parapet. Ah, I had forgot-I sought ten, if I had ever realized! A thick hedge nails, guarded the ends. I could hear in the stillness the steps of their shrill and menacing whistle answered-good Heavens!-answered close by from the side of the bridge. Grimes must be hurrying up from the lodge! I was caught as in a trap upon that narrow has the usual fate of being "knocked in way. Hark! Another whistle. But this the head with the milk pail," the adis the whistle of a train. With startling distinctness I hear the click of a distant signal and see the white light at the be ginning of the curve turn to a sudden red. There is a nearing roll of wheels, a discordant jingling and jolting, a roaring of steam, and as at each end of the bridge appear the figures of those who seek my ife, the train beneath has halted half-way through.

Saved! saved! I vault upon the parapet. I shake my fist, and throw a curse to the murderous ruffians, and drop, with what care I may, upon the wagon beneath me. The tarpaulin covering yields to my weight. I am uninjured. The figures of of the signal-lamp turns to a vivid green a short whistle, a succession of jolts, and we are speeding away towards Euston—towards safety—towards Mary!

With the blast of bugles, where Straight into a slaughter pen,
With his doomed three hundred men, Rod the chief with vellow hair.

O Hampton, down by the sea! What voice is beseeching thee For the scholar's lowliest place? Can this be the voice of him
Who fought on the Big Horn's rim?
Can this be Rain-in-the-Face?

The hatchet lies overgrown With grass by the Yellowstone,
Wind River and Paw of Bear;
And, in sign that foes are friends,
Each lodge like a peace pipe sends Its smoke in the quiet air.

The hands that have done the wrong To right the wronged are strong,
And the voice of a Nation saith:
"Enough of the war of words,
Enough of the lying swords
And shame of a broken faith!"

The Ute the wandering Crow Shall know as the white men know, And fare as the white men fare; The pale and red shall be brothers, One's right's shall be as another's Home, School, and House of Prayer!

Through meadows by war once trod,
O wild waste lands that await The harvest exceeding great.

Two of the foods were also combined, makensilage. The highest amount of hay eaten by any cow in one day was 20 lbs. and no ensilage 55 lbs. The apparent bulk of the ensilage over the hay, as shown by weight, may be explained by the fact that the hay is dry while ensilage is juicy. The highest cost of milk per quart was from a liberal hay and grain feed, being 2.03 cents per quart. The milk produced at the lowest cost was from a moderate feeding of ensilage and corn meal, and was but 0.83. cents per quart It may be noticed, therefore, that a quart of milk produced by feeding hay and grain cost as much as 21 quarts produced by feeding ensilage and corn meal, and so far as the quality of the milk was concerned under the various conditions of feed given, no serious alteration in its composition was noticed."—National Live

The Little Sisters.

A STORY FOR THE CHILDREN. Far away on a green island in the great ocean, where the foam-crested waves dash against high, black rocks, lived two little sisters. Duddgha, a quiet, fanciful child with a twisted, misshappen body, and Gurtha, a merry, happy elf, as straight and beautiful as a pine tree. Gurtha loved the birds, the trees and the sunlight, because they made the world beautiful. The blue sky had given its color to her eyes, and her hair was like tangled sunbeams.

Duddgha's hair was the color of the brown driftweed, and her eyes were like the autumn sea-gray, changeful and so clear one could see the child's beautiful soul as plainly as the coral can be seen deep down in the water when the sea is calm and clear.

She, too, loved the birds, flowers and yellow sunlight. They were her friends and playmates. The wind never kissed her roughly, the flowers nodded and smiled when she passed, and the birds that rested on the rock, in their flight to the summerland, twittered of strange, beautiful countries over the sea, and how she loved the sea, the restless, murmuring sea. She would sit for hours on a rock that the waves as they dashed against the the Anglo-Saxon breast, recently ob-

But soon the beautiful soul tired of its ugly prison and longed to fly away. oh, so far away, and at night when which nowhere else are so clearly deevery one was asleep, she crept out on the rocks and waited for the sea princesses, but for a long time they came not and the waves moaned and dashed against the rock. One bright moonlight night, as she call, and the waves kept repeating come, come. She went out on the rock in her little white gown and bare feet, tender little feet that felt not the sharp rocks. She could still hear the voices calling and looking up she saw little soft white clouds that gradually grew brighter, and then she saw they were not cl uls, but white forms holding out little arms to her saying softly, come -come -- and she could hear faint stra ns of beautiful music.

Out in the water were the sea princesses; they, too, held out their beautifal arms and said come; above her the little white forms hovered, the sea moaned and sobbed around the rock, mingling its sad music with the music of the angels.

The European almond is mainly grown at Malaga and Valencia in Spain. It is from there that Boston and New York get their supply. If we devoted a little more attention to the cultivation of this valuable fruit we might take this market from Spain. There is no reason to fear that the market will eyer be overstocked. It is curious that the Hebrew word for almond should be shaked, which also means hasten. Commentators explain that, when the almond blossoms, the fruit hastens to appear and mature. Those who are satisfied with this explanation are welcome to it. It is borne out by a passage in Jeremiah, where the Lord appears to the prophet and asks: "What seest thou?" Jeremiah answers: "The rod of an almond tree." Whereupon the Lord replies: "Thou hast well seen, for I will hasten my word to perform it." It is not to be supposed that the inspired writer would have condescended to make a pun. -- San Francisco Call.

The following words, in praise of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a remedy for those delicate diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, must be of interest to every sufferer from such maladies. They are fair samples of the spontaneous expressions with which thousands give utterance to their sense of gratitude for the inestimable boon of health which has been restored to them by the use of this world-famed medicine.

THE GREATEST

EARTHLY BOON.

JOHN E. SEGAR, of Millenbeek, Va., writes:
"My wife had been suffering for two or three years with female weakness, and had paid out one hundred dollars to physicians without relief. She took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it did her more good than all the medicine given to her by the physicians during the three years they had been practicing upon her." years they had been practicing upon her. Mrs. George Herger, of Westfield, N. Y., rrites: "I was a great sufferer from leucorhea, bearing-down pains, and pain continually across my back. Three bottles of your Favorite Prescription' restored me to perect health. I treated with Dr. ———, for the months, without receiving any benefit. prion' is the greatest earthly boon to us."."

Mrs. Sophia F. Boswell, White Cottage, O., writes: "I took eleven bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and one bottle of your 'Pellets,' I am doing my work, and have been for some time. I have had to employ help for about sixteen years before I commenced taking your medicine. I have had to wear a supporter most of the time; this I have laid aside, and feel as well as I ever did."

Again she writes: "Having taken several bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I have regained my health wonderfully, to the astonishattending to the duties of my household.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous exhaustion or prostration, another with pain here or there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent, or over-busy doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some womb disorder. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, encourages his practice until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, but probably worse by reason of the delay, wrong treatment and consequent complications. A proper medicine, like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

Mrs. E. F. Morgan, of No. 71 Lexington St.,

Batter Boston, Mass., says: "Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians. I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and using the local treatment recommended in his 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' I commenced to improve at once. In three months I was perfectly eured, and have had no trouble since. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them, and enclosing a stamped-envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my ease and the treatment used, and have earnestly advised them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks, stating that they had commenced the use of 'Favorite Prescription,' had sent the $1.50 required for the 'Medical Adviser,' and had applied the local treatment so fully and plainly laid down therein, and were much better already."

DOCTORS.

A Marvelous Cure.—Mrs. G. F. Sprague, of Crystal, Mich., writes: "I was troubled with female weakness, leucorrhea and falling of the womb for seven years, so I had to keep my bed for a good part of the time. I doctored with an army of different physicians, and spent large sums of money, but received no lasting benefit. At last my husband persuaded me to try your medicines, which I was loath to do, because I was prejudiced against them, and the doctors said they would do me no good. I finally told my husband that if he would get me some of your medicines, I would try them against the advice of my physician. He got me six bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription,' also six bottles of the 'Discovery,' for ten dollars. I took three bottles of 'Discovery,' and four of 'Favorite Prescription,' and I have been a sound woman for four years. I then gave the balance of the medicine to my sister, who was troubled in the same way, and she cured herself in a short time. I have not had to take any medicine now for almost four years."

THURSDAY, APRIL. 21, 1887.

WE could not join in the general chorus of newspaper condemnation of the Governor for vetoing the Supervisors' proceedings bill. We do, indeed, condemn the veto; but if we could find no other ground for the condemnation than is alleged by a majority of the papers, we should be ashamed to utter a complaint. Nearly all of them put it on the ground that the bill would be beneficial to the newspapers, which is no proper reason for urging its passage, and is calculated to destroy the force of their objections to the Governor's act. If he shall have merely interposed his veto to prevent the expenditure of public money for the benefit of a few newspapers, he will have done well, and we will not degrade the dignity of our profession, and dishonor the responsibility that we assume, by making a possible petty private advantage the measure of our judgment of a public policy. On every side the Governor is reminded that he is indebted to the newspapers for his election, and that, as the Tuscola Advertiser puts it, "the first opportunity afforded him in which he might reciprocate for what has been done for him by these journals, he deals a telling blow at their interests." The suggestion there contained is positively corrupt and disgraceful. Any paper that supported Governor Luce's election from motives so low, ought to be disappointed. What sort of influence can such a paper expect to have with thinking men, when it assumes to discuss questions of public policy and advise as to public duties! Or what influence must such a course have upon official integrity and popular ideas of honesty in political affairs? It says to the Legislature, We elected you; this is for our interest; do it in recognition of your obligation to us, or we will crush you. Now we agree, as fully as those papers which we criticise, that the Governor's veto of the Supervisors' proceedings bill was wrong, and that the Legislature should pass the bill over the veto, not because it would be beneficial to newspapers-we don't know whether it would or not, and are certain it would not affect us-but because all boards of supervisors ought to be required by law to do what they have voluntarily done in this and some other counties: inform the people in the most effective way of all that they do in the name of the people and affecting the rights and interests of the people. It is to the public interest that that should be done, and the Governor's ground of objection that some expense would attend it has no force against that, while it would have force against the consideration that so many papers have advanced. THE inter-state commerce commission, through Judge Cooley, have delivered a ruling upon some points presented, which concludes with these an editorial of this paper last week:

"stick in the bark" of the phrases and expressions of the law, inventing doubts and imagining dangers. It is sill more unjustifiable for railroad companies to make use of the general clauses of the law, ignoring its modifying and enlarging words and formulas, in order to impose additional burdens upon localities, trades, professions, manufacturers, consumers, classes of travelers or employes, straining and repressing every construction in favor of the corporate treasury, and quoting the new law as their authority for all manner of petty exactions. The powers of the commission are entirely adequate to cope with such conduct, the existence of which is not affirmed, although it has been somewhat publicly suggested. The same statute which enacts that charges for like service shall be uniform to all, also provides that charges in every case and for every kind and class of service, shall be reasenable and just.

This is an important determination of the unlawful character of such combinations to injure a private business, and establishes their liability to penalties under the conspiracy laws which was suggested in this paper more than a year ago.

IF anybody can tell why the people voted as they did upon the amendment relative to judicial circuits, it would be interesting to hear. Its purpose was it. to permit the people of Saginaw county to elect an additional Circuit Judge, whenever the Legislature should so authorize them to do. The voters of Pittsthe people of Saginaw might have an- against the almost solid opposition of other Judge, but only 2 in Northfield his party. This arrangement of the counties suggests some features of the result that are not so obvious without it. Every one has seen, of course, that in the lower peninsula, in spite of Wayne significant words, quite in the line of | county, the amendment had nearly four thousand majority, and that in the The language and the tenor of the act wholly fail to justify railroad managers, if any such there be, who refuse to accept responsibilities, decline to offer rates, neglect to announce conditions of traffic, embarrass the customary interchange of business and impose stagnation upon trade, while they "stick in the bark" of the phrases and expressions of the law, inventing doubts and thousand majority, and that in the whole state outside of Wayne county it had nearly eighteen thousand; but it had nearly eighteen thousand; but it had not been so plainly seen; perhaps, that outside of nine Lake Huron counties the state had given nearly six thousand majority for the amendment, ties the state had given nearly six in spite of Wayne, Monroe, Macomb, St. Clair, and the whole upper peninsula. Leaving out Wayne county, which is exceptional because of the city of Detroit, and leaving out Manitou from which there are no reports, and we have fourteen east shore counties voting 16,557 no, and fourteen west shore counties voting 8,180 yes-a very surprising difference. The only doubt of his triumphant re-election arises from the fact that a wing of his party repudiates him as its representative. This is especially true of his own state, and of the more active body of politicians in it, who control local conventions. The party machine is a most important agent in determining the nomination, and the machine is not friendly to the President Fortunately for the country, the President is very much stronger than his party, and he personally commands a confidence that his party does not. It will be compelled to renominate him, or abandon the hope of success. Yet the hostility to him in his own party in New York is such that even were he renominated, his democratic opponents would see him defeated with the same equanimity that the Blaine republicans witnessed the defeat of Mr. Davenport, and, as in that case also, They would be Quite Capable of Making sure of

We find the foregoing, with the initials, "B. S.," attached, in a collection of clippings. In Monday's Detroit Journal is a communication from Mrs. M. A. A. B., Portland, Mich., saying that the lines, "If I Should Die To-Night." which had been attributed to Henry Ward Beecher, were written ten years ago, by Mrs. E. A. Terry, of Portland, after a great struggle and reverse of fortune. The note adds that she is a lady, a victim of circumstances and very sensitive, whose talent is scarcely known there.

MUCH surprise has been caused by the revelation that the remains of Abraham Lincoln have not for many years been in the marble sarcophagus which visitors have seen through the grated door of the tomb in the base of the monument at Springfield. After the attempt to steal the body, several years ago, it was secretly removed and buried in a grave only known to a few persons, and the show of guarding the tomb was only a pretense. Now, when the lapse of time is thought to have removed the danger, the disclosure is made, and the body was publicly deposited in the tomb last Thursday The coffin was opened, and the face was found well preserved and readily recognizable, twenty-two years after

IT is not, perhaps, surprising that the jury in the Haddock murder case should have disagreed, but it is surprising that they should have stood eleven for acquittal. If reports of tampering with the jury have any foundation, as the result would lead us to suspect, more will be heard of it. The closing speech for the defense is reported by the Chicago papers as one of the most disgraceful scenes ever witnessed in a court of justice. The advocate, Judge Pendleton, was so drunk as to be utterly maudlin and incoherent. and the court, counsel and spectators were shocked and humiliated.

While in the midst of a sermon he would pause and say, "My brethren, I'll preach to you again one year from now at this very house, and he always kept his word, even though he had to walk fifty miles to do By reason of his eccentricities he was frequently the subject of a joke or anecdote. There is one which was credited to him over fifty years ago, but I think it was ill-timed and was not, judging from what I have gathered of the character of the man, altogether true. It was on the occasion of a visit he paid to this vicinity not long before he passed to his reward. It will be remembered that the people had great faith in him and the illiterate had an idea that he could work miracles. "Once upon a time," as the story writers would say, Parson Dow stopped at a log cabin near this city. host was a man given to drink, and all the efforts of the wife to stop him were of no avail. She asked the eccentric parson if he could in any way help her husband. The parson said he would resort to prayer after supper when her husband returned home. Just before supper was announced, however, the husband came staggering in the cabin door. He was jolly. He was drunk. The good wife greets him with the information: "Parson Dow is up-stairs in the loft," which was the best accommodation that could be given him. "Is-s-s he?" drawled the tipsy husband. "We-l-l-l, br-br-bring him d-d-down." This order was obeyed, and presently the parson came down. "C-can you r-raise th-th-the d-devil, Pr-pr-Parson Dow? If y-y-you can I'll b-b-believe in you." The parson had seen a barrel of cotton in the loft. An idea struck him. He steps outside, gets a little negro boy, and puts him in the barrel of cotton. The barrel and the boy were brought down from the loft. The tipsy landlord asked: "Pr-pr-parson, c-c-can you r-r-raise th-th-the devil?" "Yes, if you give me a light," came the answer. A light was brought. The cotton was set afire. Presently out jumped the little black negro, and the half-dazed husband, frightened, but yet fully convinced of parson's supernatural powers, exclaimed, amid excitement and fusion, in the vernacular of the day: 'Pr-pr-parson, I-I-I'm yore m-m-meat; I-I-I'll q-q-quit," and sure enough, he never "smiled again."-Richmond Dispatch.

As most of the plagues and sicknesses and despotisms come out of the East, it was appropriate that the new conqueror should ome out of the same quarter. Power is given him to awaken all the fallen of all the centuries and of all lands, and marshal them against the black giant. Fields have already been won, but the last day of the world's existence will see the decisive battle. When Christ shall lead forth his two brigades, the brigade of the risen dead, and the brigade of the celestial host, the black giant will fall back, and the brigade from the riven sepulchres will take him beneath, and the brigade of descending immortals will take him from above, and death shall be swallowed up in victory.

How to Eat w.sely.

As a universal rule in health, and with very rare exceptions in disease, best to be eaten which the apthat is petite craves or the taste relishes. Persons rarely err in the quality of food eaten; nature's instincts are the wisest regulators in this respect. The great sources of mischief from eating are three- quantity, frequency, rapidity and from these come the horrible dyspepsias which make human life a burden, a torture, a living death. By eating fast, the stomach, like a bottle being filled through a funnel, is full and overflowing before we know it. But the most important reason is, the food is swallowed before time has been allowed to divide it in sufficently loathsome caterpillar. That albatross small pieces with the teeth; for, like ice in a tumbler of water, the smaller the bits are, the sooner they are dissolved. It has been seen with the naked eve that if solid food is cut up in pieces small as half a pea, it digests almost as soon, without being chewed at all, as if it had been well masticated. The best plan, therefore, is for all persons to thus comminute their food; tor even if it is well chewed, of hurry, forgetfulness, or bad teeth.

Cheerful conversation prevents rapid eating. It requires about five hours for a common meal to dissolve and pass out of the stomach, during which time this organ is incessantly at work, when it must have repose, as any other muscle or set of muscles, after such a length of effort. Hence, persons should not eat within less than a five-hours interval. The heart itself is at rest more than one third of its time. The brain perishes without repose. Never tired when night comes. A CORN-SHUCKING.

It was early autumn. The foliage of the distant woodland had taken on all the variegated hues of a summer rainbow. The gum trees and maples were one solid sheet of ruddy flame, and the towering hickory trees were covered with orange and gold. The persimmon trees were loaded with the grapes hung in purple clusters on the dilapidated fence rails next to the

In the broad and swelling fields the open cotton shone like a great snow-bank, and in the corn only the "slipshucks" remained to show where the lusty brown ears had hung. The corn had been gathered and hauled to the great lot where the cribs stood waiting for the harvest.

Day after day for a whole week the loaded wagons had been driven to the lot, each depositing its load on the Green, the driver, himself could not see over the top of it. Then came the night of nights, the "corn-shucking." The hands on the plantations, far and near, had assembled to join in the work that was more than half frolic. Blowing merry tunes on their quills, stopping every now and then for a "pat and dance" in the sandy road, they came singly, in pairs, and in crowds, singing snatches of wild planthe comminution is no injury, while tation melodies, or "whooping" in that it is of very great importance in case peculiar way of theirs which was like the rich tones of a bugle sounding far away. Rapidly the crowd gathered; the dusky light of an October evening had settled down into a perfect night, a night with never a fleck of cloud to obscure the light of the faintest star and no coquettish moon to dim the lustre of rival planets. Across the fields hung shreds of silvery mist, and far away beyond the gently undulating surface of the cotton-fields rose gaunt and grim the dark line of swamp that lay along the river. Ten thoubrain perishes without repose. Never sand dewdrops sparkled on the grass, force food on the stomach. All are so that the face of the earth seemed but a dim reflection of the arch of the glowing heavens.

'Who gwine to be de leader?" "Chally; let Chally be de leader," cried a chorus of voices; and Charley, mounting the sloping semicircle of corn and seizing a large ear for his baton, would begin:

O, dey's one ting 'er po' man Seldom evah do, Frow out de old co'n To put in de new. All 'roun' de co'n pile, Hoe jolly ho! All 'roun' de co'n pile, Hoe jolly hoe,

Ol big Joe, little Joe you bettah go; Jennie bake 'er hoe-cake slow, too slow. All 'roun' de co'n pile, Hoe jolly ho! All 'roun' de co'n pile

And the entire crowd joined in the refrain that, bursting out upon the cool night air, was wafted on the winds and echoes and re-echoed from the river swamp to the pine-covered ridge. The rustling of the husks and the spirited patter of the clean ears as they fell in the open space in front was like the soft tripping of fairy feet as an accompaniment to the merry music, up A gentleman the other day showed and down the leveled walk, keeping served, and eaten. Higher and higher mounted the stars, and brighter glowed the frosted silver handsome bracelets, composed of semi-lucid and opaline globules that seem band of the milky way, as it hung sus-pended midway the blue-black vault of the far-away heavens. And still the work, if one might class it as work, went on. Charley changed his song, body have a joy and your soul not mented with white varnish and coated and after he had sung each stanza, with the aid of a few voices, the crowd would join in the refrain, and it sounded as if one voice, so true was the har-

As the hill grew smaller the exertions were redoubled. Boys too small to shuck corn were busied with baskets carrying the shucks to the tall rail pens, and many were the wrestling match they would have among the yielding shucks as they trampled them down in the pens. The master of the house, and generally the ladies, and some of the neighboring planters would quite as much as the negroes. At length the pile would grow so small that the laborers would strike up their "supper song":

O, forty weight er Johnny cake,
An' fifty weight er cheese,
An' er big pot er hominy,
'N er little pot er pease.
O, Jenny, ain't yo' ash-cake done, my da'lin'.
Jenny, ain't yo' ash-cake done, my deah?

An' I went to de rivah. An' I could'n' git ercross, An' I give five dollahs fo' 'n ole blin' hoss. O, Jenny, ain't yo' ash-cake done, my da'lin'! Jenny, ain't yo' ash-cake done, my deah?

High 's my head, an' higher too;
O, Jenny, ain't yo' ash-cake done, my da'lin':
Jenny, ain't yo' ash-cake done, my deah?

There would be a scramble for the last ear, and when it was stripped of its husk and tossed on the pile they would make a rush for the master and, lifting him a willing captive, to their shoulders, they would carry him all around the corn pile, singing, yelling, dancing, and laughing, until they were tired out.

"Treat, boss, treat," would then be the cry, and the old brown jug would be passed, and long and deep were the draughts they made.

Under the shadow of the great sugary fruit, and the late summer honey-locust trees long tables were set, and heaped and piled in prodigal hospitality were the homely viands of the lantations, with a generous share of the "knickknacks" and goodies of the white folks' table.

"Quit dar, now. Ax the blessin', Popper Joe," and then the venerable supernumerary of the plantation would take his place at the head of the table: "Good Lo'd, mek us t'ankfu' fo' wot we 'bout to receive, an bress de missis, and de massa, an' all vo' chillen, fo' Ch'is' sake, amen."

Then there were such clatter of semicircular pile, that had grown knives and forks, and such merry peals higher and higher, until Charley of laughter that one unacquainted with the state of affairs could never have dreamed that they were slaves. Supper over, the darkies would assemble in the front yard, and after a few songs and dances they would disperse, and their mellow songs could be heard for a long distance as they tramped homeward through the sombre woods.

Admiral Courbet's Brain Food.

The following yarn was spun me several years ago by one of Courbet's former messmates:

Some years ago, when the hero of Tonquin was a simple lieutenant, he was detailed in company with half a dozen sailors to explore a savage portion of the west African coast near Dahomey. For days they had traversed the wilderness without meeting anything in the shape of animal life save monkeys, squirrels, small birds, and like game, too spry to admit of famine, the little caravan found itself one day at eventide wandering helplessly about in a jungle of umbrageous verdure. Suddenly one of the men espied a hut, neatly ensconced in group of palms. Entering, they found three negresses in the act of making their painfully simple toilet. Having conciliated the swarthy forest nymphs by the gift of some glass beads, Courbet demanded food. The dusky "maitresses de la maison" bestirred themselves with generous zeal, and soon sailors broke into a saucepan and placed upon the fire.

em?" asked Courbet. "We have neither butter, lard, nor cheese." Gazing around the hut, one of the sailors espied a bunch of mushrooms hanging on the wall. In a twinkling the mushrooms were seized upon and delivered to the cook pro tem., who speedily sliced them up and flung them in the saucepan. Upon beholding this brisk appropriation of their stores the three dusky dames gave a frightful screech, threw themselves on their knees before Courbet, and seemed by their gestures to implore the restitution of their mushrooms. Vain prayers.

In due time the omelet was cooked, peased, the unceremonious Gauls were about taking leave of the victimized ladies when five stark-naked savages dashed into the hut with a blood-curdling yell. It was the proprietor accompanied by his four sons. Immediately the women broke out afresh with their plaintive howls, pointing to the place whence the mushrooms had been so ravenously snatched. The savages took in the situation at a glance and rushed upon Courbet and party, ferociously brandishing their clubs. Courbet lost no time in drawing his revolver, and his men followed suit. Thus armed, they advanced threateningly toward the infuriated negroes, who, finding themselves immensely in the minority, hastily modified their maneuvers, while the father of the flock stammered out a few words of mangled English by way of explana-

Horrible revelation! From the words of this old cannibal Courbet learned that the supposed mushrooms were no mushrooms at all, but simply human brains which the provident housewife was drying in the sun against a rainy day.

Courbet acknowledged afterward that he had never eaten so savory an omelet. Albeit the immediate effects were disastrous.—Detroit Free Press.

Having Fun with a Sparrow.

Upon a pigeon-box in the yard was affixed a piece of looking-glass. The male sparrow would get as mad as possible at the reflection of his image in the mirror, and fight it furiously lently against the glass as to knock himself backward in the air, whence he would return with increased vioto rest, with his wings dragging, his mouth open, and his sides panting. After resting a while he would pick up a small gravel-stone in his pletely exhausted.—Richmond Whig.

They seldom travel alone, but in companies roam the plains of Russia and Poland, ever talk ng, ever restless; watched, feared, and hated; and they turn in, ever watching, ever hating, and never afraid, yet distrust ever lurks in their finely chiselled faces.

It is not until one has seen these Polish Jews, watched their strangely expressive faces, and studied their peculiar character, that he appreciates that they are direct descendants of the Jews of history, who for ages suffered unspeakable outrages. The wrongs described by historians are plainly written in their faces, and as they glide noiselessly along the street, with restless, Jesuitical countenances, one feels suspicious in spite of himself.

Many of these people are undoubtedly obnoxious. I have seen a weary woman struggle through the crowd at a railway station to get water for her little ones, when a priestly-looking dervish snatched the cup from her hand and drank the water with the manners of a beast. Why these yellow-haired wanderers always travel in squads of three, no one explains. They swarm the country. The cruelties of centuries have given them a ferocious, hunted look, and made them as brutal as animals, yet their intellect lifts them above their oppressors, who call them more'n a fly," said one of them-"spies." -- RALPH MEEKER, in Harper,s "Well," said the other, "I dunno how Magazine of April.

She Wills Him to be a Widower.

Something of a novelty in the way of wills came up in Surrogate's court in Kingston yesterday. The will in ques. tion was made by a married woman She devised the property to her husband during life in case he "remained unmarried." Men often execute wills making a devise of property to their wives subject to the condition that they shall remain unmarried, but women usually give their property without any attempt at hampering their husbands affections in the future. The will shows something of a change in the orthodox phraseology of wills of wives in devising their estates, and tends to show that women, are becoming more independent in their ideas and more fully aware of their rights regarding property.—Kingsion (N.
